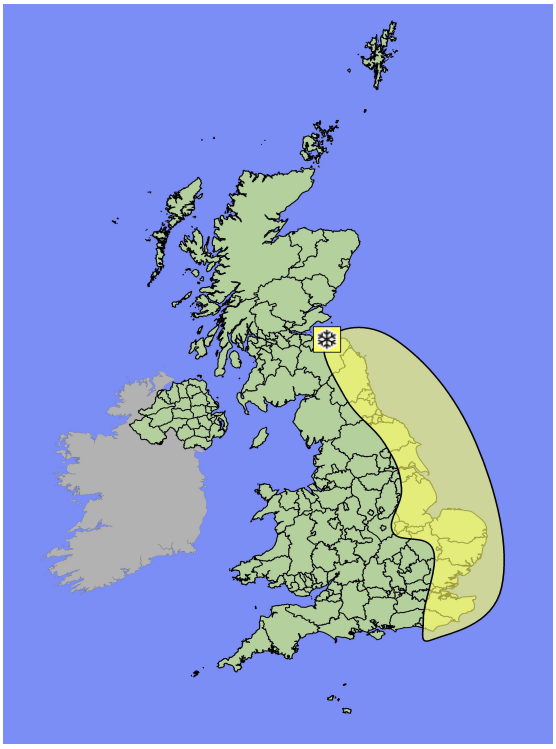
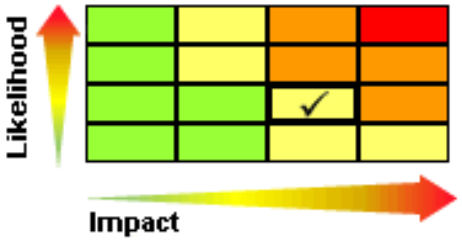
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
A retreating area of low pressure will leave a showery east to northeasterly airflow across eastern parts of the UK, with the air cold enough for snow. Accumulations of snow will be very variable, but some places could see 5-10 cm of fresh snow, particularly just inland from North Sea coasts.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Alert of Snow

Valid from 00:05 on Tue, 15th Jan 2013 until 23:55 on Tue, 15th Jan 2013

Snow showers will affect eastern areas of both southern Scotland and England brought in by brisk northeasterly winds. These may add a few more centimetres of snow to any existing accumulations. For the southeast of England the main risk period is during the early hours of Tuesday morning. Given the very cold temperatures overnight any thawing of the snow by day will lead to icy stretches overnight.

The public should be aware of the continuing risk of disruption to travel.

The public are advised to be aware of the risk of disruption to transport.
